This ingredient seems to counteract the other.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1823: US President James Monroe declared the "Monroe Doctrine" opposing European colonialism in the Americas, arguing any European political intervention in the New World would be a hostile act against the United States.

In 1845: US President James K. Polk announced to Congress that the United States should aggressively expand into the West, a widely held belief termed "manifest destiny" by newspaper editor John O'Sullivan.
